

Jamie Wall was born in Green Bay and raised on his family's small dairy farm in southern Brown County. He was the first member of his family to attend college. Jamie has real-world experience helping businesspeople find and implement solutions to difficult problems. He also spent a couple of years running Wisconsin's private-sector economic development programs, working with large and small businesses across the state to create jobs. Jamie is active in the community, serving as vice president of the Green Bay Water Commission and as treasurer of his local neighborhood association.